

Retrieval of Failure

If, at any point during the course, a student is not considered to be achieving the required standard, the student will be interviewed and given verbal and written warnings by the Director.

If, at the Final Progress Review, a student is not considered to have demonstrated that they have fulfilled the objectives of the course and achieved the required standard, they may be invited to produce further evidence of their skills and abilities within an agreed timescale. The degree of suitable evidence and the appropriate timescale for delivery will be determined by the Final Progress Review and will address the specific problems of the individual student. The student will receive a written record of the additional programme of work agreed by the Final Exam Board.

The additional work will be considered by a further Final Progress Review and if the student achieves the required standard a recommendation to pass will be given to the Sub-Board. If successful, the degree will be awarded. If the student does not reach the required standard, the degree will not be awarded. In such a case students should use the Academic Appeals procedure detailed in the Student Information Handbook.
